THE GAZETTE.

FRIDAY MORNING, JANUARY 15, 1858.

I object to the personal appearance of the I think his nose too long, his ferehead too low, and his legs (except in the case of the cart-horse) ridiculously thin by comparson with the size of his body. Again, considering how big an animal he is, I object to the contemptible delicacy of his constitution. Is he not the sickliest creature in creation? does any child catch cold as easily as a borse?--Does he not sprain his fetlock, for all his atpearance of superior strength, as early as I eprained my ancie? Furthermore, to take him from another point of view, what a helpless wretch he is? No fine lady requires more constant waiting-on than a horse .--Other animals can make their own toilette; be must have a groom. You will tell me that this is because we want to make his coat artiAUCTION SALES.
